SCOPE:

The Russian Law Journal is one of the first academic legal journals in English to be published in Russia. Our goal is to provide scholars worldwide with comparative papers on recent legal developments not only in Russia, but also in Eurasia, other jurisdictions and on the international level. The idea to establish this journal belongs to the following scholars of Moscow State Lomonosov University Law Faculty: Gleb Bogush, Nataliya Bocharova, Dmitry and Anastasia Maleshin and Sergei Tretyakov. We want to bring the Russian academic legal tradition closer to the international environment and make Russian legal scholarship more accessible to other scholars and well-known worldwide.

Our editorial policy is governed by independent quality control. It is guaranteed by the Editorial Council and Editorial Board. We are proud to have such eminent scholars in our Editorial Council which is composed of professors from world-leading law schools: Yale, Harvard, Sorbonne, Cambridge, NYU, etc. Our Editorial Board is composed of scholars from leading Russian law schools (Moscow State Lomonosov University, Saint-Petersburg State University, Moscow State Kutafin Law University, Higher School of Economics, etc.).

First, due to the origin of our Journal, Russian law is our priority. We want Russian legal theories, practice and legislative innovations to be known in the international academic environment. One of the Russian disadvantages is insularity of our scholars. At the same time there are many interesting projects and theories which are unknown on the international level.

Second, we are very flexible in our editorial policies. We welcome articles from other countries. We want to make our journal the platform of the international comparative discussion on different legal subjects regardless of nationality. Our scope is not limited to any national law, but is open to other jurisdictions.

Third, comparative research is also our goal. In spite of the view that globalization is not a good word to use with respect to law, in the contemporary highly interactive and cooperative world national frontiers in law become very transparent. On the other hand national character has become much more glaring. As a result, law nowadays has two opposite trends: legislation becomes closer and similar, but there are many differences in actual judicial practice in the realization of this similar legislation. The rule of law in Europe, Asia and America differs from each other no less than centuries ago even as legislation has become similar. Nowadays we have a unique situation: legislation is similar, but practice is different. In this new environment, comparative law has a crucial role. We need to organize international scholarly platforms to discuss the problems that occur in the realization of similar legal constructions in different societies. Our journal could be one of such platforms for this dialogue.

Fourth, we don't have any preferences in the fields of law. All branches of law are interesting to us. We have adopted the approximate list of subjects to be considered: constitutional law, private international law, international civil law, international public law, civil procedure, philosophy and policy of law, criminal law, international criminal law, criminal proceeding, human rights law, law & society, law & economics. This list is not a rule and we are not limited by it. All other subjects are also welcome.

Finally, we take into account our geographical and geopolitical situation. We realize that there is a huge competition in the area of comparative legal journals in English and it will be very difficult to be better than others. At the same time we know our niche. The secret of our success could be our Eurasian geographical and geopolitical factor. The word "Eurasia" has different meanings. It could be considered as a form of globalization, suggesting that Europe and Asia are integrated. Another conception ascertains that there is a huge territory on the frontiers of Europe and Asia which shares similar cultural characteristics. Moreover, there are sometimes close political, economic and historical backgrounds among Eurasian nations. Their law also has similarities. We want to, and we could be, the best legal academic journal in Eurasia: in the countries of Eurasia and on the legal developments of these countries. We have the potential to realize this aim in the mid-term period.

Submission of an original research article to Russian Law Journal (RLJ)

Ahmad Redi <ahmad_redi@borobudur.ac.id>

Dear Editor-in-Chief,

My name is Ahmad Redi as the corresponding author for this article

We would like to submit the enclosed manuscript entitled "MINING LEGAL POLICY BASED ON LOCAL WISDOM IN INDONESIA", which we wish to be considered for publication in "Russian Law Journal (RLJ)".

No conflict of interest exists in the submission of this manuscript, and manuscript is approved by all authors for publication. We would like to declare on behalf of my co-authors that the work described was original research that has not been published previously, and not under consideration for publication elsewhere, in whole or in part. All the authors listed have approved the manuscript that is enclosed.

Local wisdom encompasses the intrinsic values, cultural practices, and accumulated knowledge endured among indigenous societies, particularly within mining activities. This study examines the impact of incorporating local wisdom into mining legislation on achieving a harmonious equilibrium between the exploitation of natural resources, environmental preservation, and safeguarding indigenous peoples' rights. The objective of this study is to examine the implementation and consequences of mining law rules in Indonesia that are grounded in local wisdom. The research approach employed in this study is normative legal research, which entails examining and analyzing mining legal laws applicable in Indonesia. This includes an exploration of rules that encompass many parts of local wisdom. The findings of this study demonstrate that alterations in mining legislation in Indonesia, mainly through the implementation of Law Number 3 of 2020, which modifies Law Number 4 of 2009, have resulted in substantial transformations in the mining landscape. The concentration of mining policy at the national level has diminished local governments' capacity to exercise regulatory control over the mining industry. Nevertheless, the extraction of legal laws grounded in indigenous knowledge is crucial as it acknowledges the wide range of environmental attributes and circumstances present in individual regions. This facilitates the implementation of more pertinent and efficient legislation, promotes comprehensive environmental preservation, places attention on the socio-economic consequences, and mitigates the occurrence of social conflicts. While the central government maintains primary authority, there have been endeavors to prioritize the inclusion of local viewpoints, wisdom, and the needs of communities in the management of mining activities in Indonesia. I hope this paper is suitable for "Russian Law Journal (RLJ)"

Thank You very much

We are looking forward to your kindly response soon.
